

ITALIANS TELL OF STARVATION ON PRISON FARE

Escape from Austrian Camps to Relate Pathetic Tales of Hardship.

New York, Aug. 2.—Many Italian prisoners have recently escaped from Austrian prison camps, according to cable dispatches made public recently by Dr. Felice Ferrero, director of the Italian Bureau of Information. Three hundred prisoners have recently reached Rumania, where they were enthusiastically received. There was one priest among them. They all made the trip safely in spite of great privations and dangers.

An Italian corporal has reached the Piave, following his escape from an Austrian camp. The corporal was suffering from a severe fever which he had contracted in camp. He reported that although his temperature was more than 100 degrees he had been beaten and forced to work. He said that other prisoners were frequently beaten because they were unable to work.

Their food consisted chiefly of beet roots. Work in the Austrian prison camps began at 4 a. m. and ended at 5 p. m. The prisoners were exposed to greater exertions by guards, who beat them with heavy clubs.

Tried Twice to Escape.

Caldio Ferdinando Reggio, of Calabria, a member of the Bersaglieri, who was captured last November, tried twice to escape, succeeding on his third attempt. He wandered from house to house through the invaded provinces of northern Italy and the inhabitants trusted to him letters for their relatives. These letters picture a most deplorable situation, especially in Friuli. They all report pitiful privations and great hunger. One of the letters said that the Austrians ate all the food they could and drank all the wine possible and then destroyed everything that remained that they could put their hands on. Wine ran in the gutters and the casks were used for kindling.

Another letter states that if the people are not quickly delivered starvation is certain. Still another describes the situation as desperate. The Austrians impose almost daily requisitions on civilians who live like hermits in an endeavor to avoid contact with the invaders. The Austrians have frequently burned whole forests, forcing the inhabitants to abandon their houses.

All the prisoners report that the Italians in the invaded provinces still maintain their faith in an early deliverance and all of them are willing to risk even the greatest dangers to help escaped prisoners reach Italy.

Guido Friso, a prisoner captured by the Austrians at Caporetto, escaped from the Kolzav camp, reaching Zagabria. He swam the Danube to Trouzo, where gendarmes captured him. On his way back to camp in the custody of the officers, Friso jumped from the moving train and succeeded in concealing himself. He met an escaped Italian captain and a lieutenant, and the three reached Marano Lagunare, where they bought a boat. Lulizi Lessani, of Tavernola, saw the three drowning, their boat having capsized, and succeeded in rescuing all of them. Later they landed at Cavazuccherina.

Stare-competition has taken a new direction. The effort is now devoted to rendering better and better advice to you, not in trying to persuade you to buy something with which you might easily dispense. Merchants want you to economize.
